

Doug Fox -- Biography
Chief Information Officer
Angelo State University

Doug has served as the leader of Information Technology at Angelo State University (ASU) since 1996. Doug leads a team of professional staff and students that oversee and support the campus technology environment. During his tenure, Doug's team has played an active role in positioning ASU to take advantage of new technologies that improve campus efficiencies, student learning, and support student recruiting and retention efforts. Prior to his move into higher education, Doug worked in the private sector for over 10 years in software development and leadership roles at Link Flight Simulation, Motorola, and Verizon.

Doug and his team are past recipients of the American Association of University Administrators John Blackburn award for exemplary leadership. In 2009, he was the recipient of the President's Award for IT Excellence from TASSCC. Doug has served on several local and state organizations and boards. He is a past Chair of the Texas Connection Consortium and the past Chair of the Concho Valley School to Work Council. Doug is currently a member of the Business Executive Leadership Council that oversees statewide shared technology services that are offered through the Texas Department of Information Resources.
